AGENCY

Local Environ

The Environment Agency is making plans for your area, which will improve your environment, in the air, on the land and in water. They are called Local Environment Agency Plans or LEAPS.

How do we make these plans? We talk to people in the community, the local authorities and interested groups so that we can work together. As partners we can plan for the future and protect your environment for the next generation.

Local Environment Agency Plans will result in actions for either the Agency or others to undertake through partnerships at local level. Involvement of local communities and in particular local authorities will be important in establishing these partnerships and ownership of the plans by local people.

We will have all our plans published as 'Consultation Reports' for the whole of England and Wales, by the end of 1999.

Over the next five years you will see us putting these plans into action in your local area.
